The rapid spread of COVID-19 dramatically impacted the finances of the entire aviation industry. In North Carolina alone, thousands of flights were cancelled and hundreds of passenger service aircraft were parked on airfields across the State. General Aviation was not immune as airport and tenants experienced hiring freezes, travel restrictions, furloughs, business closures, and unemployment. Federal law requires that FAA obtain certain “assurances” from Airport Improvement Program grant recipients as a condition to its approval of grant applications. Those obligations generally require the airport sponsor to maintain and operate the airport safely and efficiently, and to manage the project for which funds are being provided in accordance with specified conditions. The panel will sort through the various obligations, and will help us understand the type of commitments being made by the airport sponsor (and by the person who signs the grant agreement!), the applicability of those commitments, the length of the obligations, etc. The panel also will discuss how those obligations can be enforced and who can enforce them.
